STRATEGY’S RATIONALE: (Explain in detail why your proposal is needed.)
Analyzing institutional data on student success from an equity outcome lens (Please see attached data), it is clear that Solano Community College is in need of a strategic approach to address the inequities that underrepresented students are experiencing. Considering the wide range of academic levels and racial-cultural backgrounds of our students, it is necessary to provide our institution with the professional development that will give us the tools necessary to serve our community.

STRATEGY’S DESCRIPTION (Specify in detail how and what you will accomplish.):

The BSI Committee and other faculty and administrators will engage in an action inquiry with Center for Urban Success CUE to address the equity gaps that our institution is experiencing. The tools that CUE researchers develop to facilitate action inquiry for equity take the form of various self-assessment inventories (SAIs) and data investigation protocols. These include the Equity Scorecard, the Benchmarking Equity and Student Success Tool (BESST), the Transfer Access Self-Assessment Inventory, the Equity-Based Assessment Toolkit, the Organizational Learning Inventory (OLI), and the Interactive Learning Module (ILM). The SAIs are tools to assist the learning, “equity-mindedness,” and professional development of college administrators and faculty members in ways that enhance college capacity to achieve equitable and uniformly high student learning outcomes. The tools support data-informed decision making to turn data into actionable knowledge.

Below are three tools to illustrate CUE’s expertise in facilitating organizational learning and change for equity. The most developed and extensively utilized of CUE’s tools is the Equity Scorecard¹, which is based on the Balanced Scorecard model from the business world. It has been used by over forty two- and four-year colleges and universities in six states to promote organizational learning about equity on their campuses. The Equity Scorecard focuses on promoting equitable student outcomes among racial-ethnic groups by having inquiry teams examine disaggregated student outcomes data to learn about the nature and extent of racial-ethnic student outcome inequities from four Perspectives; these are Academic Pathways, Persistence, Transfer Readiness, and Excellence.

The Transfer Access SAI² focuses on the resources, practices, and policies that promote transfer from community colleges to colleges and universities. It was first developed through a national case study of the practices and policies of “best practice pairs”³ of community and elite colleges that promote ¹ The development of the Equity Scorecard instrument, processes, and projects has been funded by the Chancellor’s Office of the California Community College system, Ford Foundation, Irvine Foundation, Lumina Foundation for Education, and the University of Wisconsin Board of Regents.

² The development of the Transfer Access Self-Assessment Inventory was supported by funding from the Jack Kent Cooke Foundation, Lumina Foundation for Education, the Nellie Mae Education Foundation, and the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation.
³ The case study colleges were selected as exemplars—-institutions whose promising practices deserved attention as models for potential dissemination—through a document review and statistical analysis showing they enrolled higher numbers of transfers than peer institutions with similar enrollment characteristics.

Updated 3/18/09
transfer to highly selective institutions. A subsequent single institution action research project, in which administrators, faculty, and counselors at a community college pilot tested a revised inventory led to a new Transfer Access SAI designed to assess transfer to all types of four-year institutions (not only those that are highly selective).

Through the California Benchmarking Project, CUE researchers developed the Benchmarking Equity and Student Success Toolkit (BESST)\(^4\). A central objective of the California Benchmarking Project was to build institutional commitment to addressing the problem of poor retention and student success, especially for underrepresented students of color, within the basic skills curriculum. To build this commitment, equity-based assessment processes and tools were developed by CUE to help uncover and investigate issues that cause inequities in basic skills and to contextualize potential solutions to address those problems. The BESST, a performance benchmarking tool, was developed to guide practitioners in an examination of their college data (successful course completion rates, persistence rates, and entering student cohort migration rates from basic skills classes to transfer classes, disaggregated by race and ethnicity) and a process of goal setting in the long-term and short-term equity.

A wide variety of assessment activities are undertaken regularly on college campuses as part of institutional self-study, accreditation, and accountability initiatives. The SAIs are distinguished by their emphasis on the development of practitioner knowledge and by their multi-faceted treatment of the educational problems that must be understood through assessment activities. The SAIs have different focal points, and can be adapted for use by higher education system leaders,\(^5\) but collectively they are intended to increase capacity among college leaders and practitioners to observe the material, social, and organizational conditions of their educational practice.

A Social Learning Theory of Professional Development

The primary method for increasing the capacity of colleges to carry out action inquiry for equity is by convening practitioners from different functional areas (faculty and administrators) to engage in collaborative assessment activities. The assessment inventories are designed to provide a productive structure for these groups, which are referred to as “evidence or “inquiry” teams, in keeping with the goal of developing a “culture of inquiry” to promote student success. The members of the teams are viewed as providing institutional leadership and as developing their leadership capacity through teamwork.

Many theories, studies, and interventions of racial-ethnic gaps in student outcomes focus on the ability of students to negotiate the opportunities and barriers of higher education.\(^6\) CUE’s focus is on studying practice settings to understand how practitioners’ knowledge, beliefs, and expertise impact student experiences and outcomes. In effect, rather than targeting interventions at remediating student deficits, CUE’s intent is “re-mediating” the institutional and professional practices of higher education to serve previously underserved student groups effectively. The necessity of this approach is supported by socio-cultural studies of learning.\(^7\) Routine professional practices are viewed as opportunities for 4 The development of the BESST was supported by funding from the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation and the Ford Foundation.

5 The Wisconsin Transfer Equity Study, funded by the Ford Foundation, provides a successful example of system-level use of CUE’s SAIs.

6 Estela Bensimon’s presidential address to the Association for the Study of Higher Education elaborates extensively on this point.

professional development and the acquisition of adaptive expertise, which is the form of expertise needed to respond expertly in instructional and administrative settings to diverse students with diverse needs.

Racial-ethnic inequities often seem natural, overwhelming, or the responsibility of other individuals or institutions. Existing postsecondary assessment instruments typically do not pay substantive attention to issues of race, ethnicity, or equity, which contributes to a “color blindness” that impedes progress towards equity. In creating assessment tools and processes for use by practitioners engaged in action inquiry, CUE researchers develop new cultural artifacts that aim to normalize equity as a postsecondary practice and goal.

In the Equity Scorecard process, student success in college is framed as an institutional responsibility that requires race-conscious expertise. The centrality of race-conscious practitioner expertise distinguishes The Equity Scorecard process from the more familiar models of student success.
Prevailing models of student success are based on socio-psychological behavioral theories of student development, integration, and engagement. Typically academic success is described and assessed as behaviors, attitudes, and aspirations that represent how college students, ideally, ought to be. The normative model of academic success focuses on student self-motivation and the amount of effort he or she willingly invests into the academic activities that signify he or she is taking the identity of college student.

Practitioners and scholars typically respond to evidence of low rates of college completion by asking questions that focus attention on the student: Are these students academically integrated? Do these students exhibit such and such behavioral patterns? Do these students exert effort? How does the effort of these students compare to the effort of such and such group? Do these students have social capital? How do the aspirations of high-performing students compare to low-performers? Are they engaged? Are they involved? Are they motivated? Are they prepared?

A premise of the Equity Scorecard process is that questions like the ones above reflect a normative model of academic success. That is, academic success is associated with the experiences, behaviors, and values of the full-time, traditional college-age student. When we come across students who are not engaged or involved; or who don’t take advantage of support resources; or who rarely ask questions or seek help we judge them as deficient and in need of compensatory interventions. These students often acquire the “at-risk” label.

CUE is supportive of the theory of student success that focuses on the knowledge and behaviors of practitioners and institutions rather than on the knowledge and behaviors of students. Instead of speaking about the racial achievement gap the focus is on the knowledge and cultural gap that undercut practitioners’ capacity to be responsive to the students they get, rather than the ones they might wish for.

CUE works with practitioners to address the logic underlying the notion of at-risk students goes something like this: “If students are not doing well it must be because they are not… exerting the effort…seeking help…motivated…; or because they are working too many hours…unprepared for college…disengaged…” Regardless of their accuracy, these explanations are not helpful. They are harmful to all students, but most particularly to students of color as they often, albeit unconsciously, reinforce stereotypical judgments of race-based deficits. The reasoning derived from normative expectations of academic success, when applied to minoritized populations, is defeatist in that patterns 186-232.

Updated 3/18/09
of racial inequity seem inevitable and self-fulfilling, and leaves little hope for practitioner agency. And it is also unproductive because a focus on the deficits of students discourages practitioners’ deeper reflection about the failure of institutional practices (including structures, leadership, culture, policies) to produce success for particular racial and ethnic groups.

ASSESSMENT OF RESULTS (Specify in detail how and when you will assess your results. Assessment of results is a requirement for continued BSI funding. If funding was used from BSI previously, then it is necessary to include detailed assessment information related to existing results.):
There will be ongoing assessments after each workshop.

“Waiting For Superman”
Building 400, Room 444 (Limited to 36 participants)
Jim Dekloe, Biology Instructor
Documentary filmmaker Davis Guggenheim starts the film by saying that he started as a tremendous advocate for public education. But when it came time to choose a school for his children, he drove past his local public school to enroll them in a private school. The controversial film WAITING FOR SUPERMAN examines the “failure” of public schools. It follows a group of children as they enter the lotteries for particular charter schools whose high test scores make them desirable. The film portrays certain reformers like controversial former DC schools Chancellor Michelle Rhee in a favorable light, and portrays teachers’ unions unfavorably. Like a good Michael Moore film, this filmmaker skillfully weaves a story, but does his story stand up to scrutiny? What has he gotten right? What has he gotten dead wrong? We will view the film and engage in a lively discussion afterwards.

Demystifying Student Attendance Reporting
Building 400, Room 445 (Limited to 42 participants)
Barbara Fountain, Director of Admissions and Records
This workshop will clarify your role in apportionment and why we in the OAR are such pains about the drop deadlines, grade and positive attendance submission, and how those things effect 320 reporting, MIS and audits.

Disaster Service Worker
Building 1600, Room 1625 (Limited to 55 participants)
Rachel Dwiggins-Beeler, Emergency Preparedness Coordinator
Are you prepared for the types of emergencies that occur on the college campus? Do you know what the college expects you to do when an emergency occurs? The Disaster Service Worker (DSW) training answers these questions and more! The DSW training ensures all campus employees understand the critical role they play in responding to and recovering from a disaster on-campus and in surrounding communities as outlined by the DSW state program. This training helps you understand the duties that may be assigned to you for the protection of public health and safety or the preservation of lives and property as well as the liability protection that DSWs are given by the state when performing the assigned duties. This training will also discuss specific procedures for localized incidents that occur on campus and steps you can take to become personally prepared. Its time to get prepared…start now!

Learning Outcomes Assessment: Closing the Loop
Location: determined by Division/Department
Tracy Schneider, LOAC, and division facilitators
Are you curious how other instructors help their students to achieve expected learning outcomes? Would you like to share your expertise and ideas for the improvement of student learning? During this bi-annual session, each faculty member will present his/her SLO assessment(s), results, and analysis to other faculty. Schools/Departments will break into segments in order for each faculty to share and discuss the implications of the individual, department, and division assessment analyses. These discussions will generate ideas for teaching as well as data and suggestions for department- and division-level planning.

1. UMOJA
   Building 700, Room 704 (Limited to 50 participants)
   Karen McCord, SCC UMOJA Coordinator
   This workshop will examine the components necessary to create a supportive learning environment for underprepared students. It will also incorporate culturally relevant pedagogy and identify courses that work best together for optimum learning success. Participants will learn how a topic specific learning community can provide a foundation that will enable students to successfully matriculate through the college experience. Participants will identify and examine early warning signs and develop student centered action and early intervention plans to increase learning and retention. College and community resources will also be identified. This workshop will incorporate a diverse student panel including a re-entry student, single parent, former foster child and ex-offender who have made a successful transition to college with the support of the Umoja Learning Community.

2. Introduction to Open Educational Resources
   Building 700, Room 705 (Limited to 55 participants)
   Barbara Illowsky, De Anza CC
   Did you know that college students spend, on average, approximately $900/year on textbooks? The expense has forced students to leave their formal education. In the past few years, foundations, faculty, and students have organized to fund, develop, search for, promote, and use Open Educational Resources (OER).

   In this session, participants will learn about different forms of OER, how to find and distinguish high quality OER, and how stakeholders are working together to substitute OER for costly texts. Learn how we can work together so that students can continue their education, stay in college, and achieve their goals.

3. College Completion: Why Accelerating Developmental English and Math is the Essential First Step
   Building 700, Room 703 (Limited to 59 participants)
   Katie Hern, Ed.D., English Instructor, Chabot College Director, California Acceleration Project
   A pervasive problem across community colleges is the high rate of attrition in pre-collegiate sequences. The more levels students must take, the less likely they are to ever complete college English or Math. This presentation makes the case that to address this problem, colleges must shorten their developmental sequences and eliminate the many exit points where students are lost. The session will highlight a number of acceleration models, with particular focus on accelerated English and pre-Statistics classes from Chabot and Los Medanos colleges, both of which have seen significant increases in the number of developmental students completing college-level coursework.

   Keynote 2 – Basic Skills Education: What have we learned?
   Building 1200, Theater
   Barbara Illowsky, Former BSI Program Director, DeAnza Community College
   The California Community Colleges Chancellor’s Office first funded the Basic Skills Initiative in 2006. It started with a literature review and then grew beyond what anyone envisioned. Has it been successful? Completely? Partly? Not at all? What, exactly, have we learned about educating students with basic skills needs? Who are these students? Have there been any successful projects to help our students move from basic skills through transfer courses? Let’s find out the answers to these questions together!

   3:00 p.m. – 4:20 p.m. (Choose one of these)

   1. Syllabi
      Building 800, room 801 (Limited to 37 participants)
      Cleavon Smith, 3CSN North Bay Regional Coordinator
      First impressions matter and our syllabus is often the tool that makes our first impression with students. The syllabus can be a lot more than just a document with schedules and rules. It can also be a manifesto to communicate our encouragement for student success, our awareness of student backgrounds and aspirations, and our philosophies informing how we feel the activities, exercises, and assignments will empower the students with opportunities to demonstrate their learning and growth over the course of the term. Please bring a copy of your current syllabus so that you can participate in this reflection activity and share with your colleagues strategies you already use to make your syllabi student-centered and your first impressions with students great.
2. The Second Chance Program

3. Integrating Contextualized Teaching & Learning with Basic Skills
   Building 800, Room 804 (Limited 54 participants)
   Barbara Illowsky, Former BSI Program Director, DeAnza Community College
   This session discusses the purposes, theory and strategies of contextualized teaching and learning and how such programs can increase the retention, success and learning enjoyment of our students.

4. Effective Practices in Learning Assistance: Butte College’s Center for Academic Success (CAS)
   Building 800, Room 811 (Limited to 55 participants)
   Miya Squires, Butte College, Center for Academic Success
   Join us for a session to learn about the Center for Academic Success (CAS) at Butte College. Our one-stop learning center supports student success campus-wide, from basic skills and general education to career and technical programs. Current practices recognized by the statewide Basic Skills Initiative include a Reading and Writing Center, Critical Skills Workshops, and an associated .5-unit Critical Skills Study Hour course. Butte’s CAS staff have presented at statewide conferences in support of developing student learning outcomes for learning assistance programs and student services. Participants will learn how the physical center and program were developed based on surveys of successful practices nationwide, and how we measure our success. This session is appropriate for basic skills faculty, learning center faculty and staff, student services personnel, and anyone interested in innovation in support of student success.
When analyzing Solano Community College disaggregated student success and graduation rate data by racial and ethnicity it is clear that a strategic research approach to address the inequities is needed. This proposal will fund the continuation of services of Center for Urban Education (CUE) to facilitate an action research team made up of SCC faculty and administrators. This team will address the equity gaps using CUE’s equity-minded tools and process, which will be described later in this grant. The Basic Skills committee has committed initial investments through the grant proposal process to have CUE with work faculty, staff and administrators, but additional assistance is anticipated for such grave disparities in success rate when disaggregated by race and ethnicity.

To help illustrate the disparity in success rate data I will use the California Community College Chancellor’s Office (CCCCO) calculation and then further disaggregate the data by race and ethnicity. CCCC0 calculates success rate by dividing the number of enrollments with grades of A, B, C, CR, P by number of enrollments with grades of A, B, C, D, F, CR, NC, W, I, P, NP, and DR. The following is the SCC college level English and Math course student success
To further illustrate the disparity in student success data, it is important to be aware of SCC’s graduation rates disaggregated by race and ethnicity. The Integrated Postsecondary Education System (IPEDS) defines the graduation rate by “the percentage of full-time, first-time students who began their studies in fall 2006 and graduated within 150% of ‘normal time’ to completion for their program.” The graduation rates by race and ethnicity are as follows: White 39 percent, Hispanic 33 percent, Asian 31 percent and African American 21 percent (IPEDS).

While community colleges have served as a gateway and/or gatekeeper to bachelor’s degrees, there is not equity in outcomes for underserved populations (Dowd, 2008; NCES, 2011, Moore & Shulock, 2010). With CUE’s lead, SCC will continue to actively build on initial work done by BSI to address the equity gaps in success and graduation rates.

To address the issue of inequities in degree completion and success in at SCC, it is necessary to start with the SCC’s practitioners (faculty, staff and administrators) at the college because they are the most consistent point of contact with students (Bensimon, 2007). Bensimon and Dowd (2009) explain that the CUE’s Equity Score Card tools are designed to assist these practitioners as they form inquiry teams, consisting of CUE facilitator and SCC faculty, staff and administrators. These teams, in a professional development sense, will examine disaggregated student outcomes by race and ethnic groups in order to learn more about the inequities in academic pathways, persistence, transfer readiness and excellence. Through this professional development, CUE “aims to increase the capacity of colleges to carry out action inquiry for equity by convening practitioners from different functional areas to engage in collaboration assessment activities” (Dowd & Bensimon, 2009, p. 9).

CUE conducts action research working with colleges on performing equity assessment and facilitating solutions for such institutional challenges. Noffke (1997) defines action research “as a social movement it is fundamentally about emergent meanings of both action and research, as well as the relationship between them” (p. 306). Action research is designed to allow practitioners to learn in their own environment, with their own data personalizing the learning experience, with a group of ideas emergent in various contexts which leads to a greater learning (Bensimon, in press; Greenwood & Levin, 2005; & Noffke, 1997). Data analyses are conducted on student success in order to build institutional responsibility, rather than practitioners explaining inequities as student deficits (Dowd, Malcom, Nakamoto, & Bensimon, in press).

The focus in action research is on problem solving at the local level within institutions on a very practical level and suited for adult learners (Noffke, 1997). Greenwood and Levin (2005) and Noffke (1997) suggest that action research aims to solve problems through democratic inquiry while collaborating with professional researchers and local stakeholders to solve the problems. Greenwood and Levin (2005) state “action research is the key to the needed fundamental transformation of the behaviors engaged in by social scientists” (p. 54). The researchers contribute the research methods and the local stakeholders offer the extensive and long-term knowledge of the problem (Greenwood & Levin, 2005). Action research teams can be conceptualized as a large family with different beliefs and relationships (Noffke, 1997).

CUE’s Equity Score Card tools and processes are a direct intervention to address equity gaps and leads to an equity minded campus. This approach of action inquiry aims bring to bring about organizational change in colleges. To assist practitioners in re-mediating practices, CUE developed several tools to help measure equity when working with campuses. These tools are Self-Assessment Inventories (SAI) and data investigation protocols such as the Equity Score Card, the Benchmarking Equity and Student Success Toolkit (BESST), the Transfer Access Self-Assessment Inventory, the Equity Based Toolkit, the Organizational Learning Inventory (OLI) and the Interactive Learning Module (ILM). The Transfer Access Inventory (SAI) focuses on the resources, practices and policies that promote transfer from community colleges to universities. The Benchmarking Equity and Student Success Toolkit (BESST) is designed to guide practitioners in examining successful course completion rates, persistence rates, and entering student cohort migration rates from basic skills classes to transfer classes, disaggregated by race and ethnicity (Bensimon & Dowd, 2009). For example, the Equity Based Assessment Toolkit helps uncover and investigates issues that cause inequity in basic skills. The Transfer Self-Assessment Inventory is designed to help community colleges assess their policies that promote or prohibit transfer from community college to university. The module encourages practitioners to dialogue about equity on their campus using intuitional disaggregated data.

Description

The SCC Basic Skills Committee (BSC) partially funded a CUE grant for the 2011-12 academic year, which will allow for CUE to work with the BSC in address the equity issues discussed. CUE will present in August 2011 to all faculty during Flex Cal. This grant will allow for a broader level participation in action inquiry by campus practitioners. The steps of implementing this grant are to first work with CUE in solidifying a contract. In preparation for the activates, CUE will work with Solano College's to assess additional services to possible include the following:
Workshop I:
"Using Data to Design Effective Action Plans"

This is a four hour workshop for participants to increase their expertise in data collection and analysis, using CUE's Benchmarking Equity and Student Success Tool. In preparation for this workshop, CUE will work with Solano College's office of research and planning to collect specific performance data for a cohort of students and convert that data for the production of customized BESST tables. This will require about 60 hours of CUE staff time to: develop an institutional profile for a student cohort; create a course pathway for basic skills math and/or English to college-credit level courses; and develop BESST tables showing rates of progress for different student groups, broken down by race and ethnicity, based on specific milestones jointly determined by Solano College and CUE.

Then CUE will develop an institutional profile for a student cohort; create a course pathway for basic skills math and/or English to college-credit level courses in math and/or English. Develop BESST tables showing rates of progress for different student groups, broken down by race and ethnicity, based on specific milestones jointly determined by Solano College and CUE.

Workshop II

“Using Inquiry to Define the Problems and Assess Potential Interventions”

CUE will prepare and conduct a 4-hour workshop which builds on the foundation developed from the first workshop. The second workshop is designed to train participants on the use of structured inquiry to understand the barriers to student success and what can be done to address institutional practices that are not working for students of color. CUE will provide tools and supplemental materials for this workshop and facilitate the discussion on conducting inquiry in general, the types of inquiry activities that may be relevant to the college and assessing intervention points. CUE will lead a discussion on how the results from benchmarking and inquiry can be incorporated into a college's action plan.

Memorandum/Report

After completion of the second workshop, CUE will summarize the findings and provide recommendations for next steps that college leadership and faculty can consider.

Timeline for Phases

The timeline for activities described above will be between August 2012 and May 2013 and can be adjusted.

Resources needed

Resources that are needed, in addition to funding, are the practitioners, facilities, data, computers, projector, flip chart paper, markers, and time allocated to the inquiry team during a division meeting in all departments (2 hours).
