Suisun Valley Review Awarded Best Small College Literary Magazine

The Spring 2019 edition of Suisun Valley Review was awarded third place for Best Overall Small College Literary Magazine in the Pacific-Western Division of the US by the Community College Humanities Association (CCHA).

Suisun Valley Review, a product of English courses 058 and 059, the Literary Magazine I and II, was established by Quinton Duval, Professor Emeritus, in 1981 for the students of Solano Community College to learn the art of editing a literary journal while working collaboratively to create the next issue of our annual magazine. Now in its thirty-fifth issue, student-editors continue to collaborate carefully to select its contents from new and established writers/artists from Solano Community College, across the country, and around the world. In cooperation with its advisor, the editors work to establish a student-centered environment to enhance the literary experience while empowering themselves in the creation of every aspect of the magazine, including selection of overall design aesthetic and narrative development of each issue. Quinton Duval shepherded the magazine from 1981 until 2006 when he passed the torch to Professor Michael J. Wyly. The students of Spring 2019 accomplished an exemplary magazine, a testament to its rich history and a portent of finer things to come.

The magazine publishes the winner of our student writing competition, the Quinton Duval Award in Creative Writing. The 2019 awardee was Carmen Silvey, for her poem, "Cabbages." SVR also works closely with the SCC Writers Series by inviting key authors as features. This year's featured writers included poet, Don Schofield, and novelist, Yang Huang.

The literary magazine competition by the Community College Humanities Association (CCHA) is a long-standing competitive award. CCHA selects its awardees in each of its five divisions. Selections are made based on college size and magazine budget. Awards for first through third place plus honorable mention are given each year in addition to an overall national award winner. This year, Suisun Valley Review won third place in the Pacific West Division which includes the states of California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, and Alaska.

SUBMISSION GUIDELINES (Spring 2020): Rights revert to author on publication. Submissions are accepted from December to March of each year. Simultaneous submissions should be noted as such. Successful submissions in fiction typically do not exceed 3,500 words. Two complimentary copies of the magazine are received upon publication. Authors are invited to the release reading held at Solano College in May of each year. Visual art must be submitted electronically and be of sufficient file size for
