About the College

The institution has been providing post-secondary educational opportunities since 1945, when it was founded as Vallejo Junior College, a part of the Vallejo Unified School District. In 1967, the College became an independent educational entity, renamed Solano County Community College, and in 1971 relocated to its current 192-acre campus just off the Interstate 80 corridor near the geographic center of Solano County in order to better serve the residents county-wide. In the 1990s, the institution's name was changed to the present Solano Community College (SCC).

As part of the 112-campus, state-wide California Community College System, Solano Community College enrolls about 12,000 students each semester, and about half as many during the summer session. During a single academic year (summer through spring), between 18,000 and 20,000 students enroll in at least one-half unit of credit at the College.

Solano Community College offers classes at its Fairfield campus and at its two new centers — one on a 10-acre site in Vallejo and the other on a 60-acre site in Vacaville. The College also offers courses at the University Center on Travis Air Force Base, at the Solano County Airport (Vacaville), and at other locations throughout the County, as needed.

The College offers 91 associate degrees and 40 certificates of achievement. More than 1,100 degrees and certificates are awarded each year and between 450 to 600 students transfer each year to campuses in the University of California, California State University, and other institutions inside or outside the State.

Around three-quarters of Solano students are part-time, taking one or two classes each term. Currently 70%-80% of incoming students test below college-level in English and math. The student body reflects the County's ethnic diversity, with African-Americans, Latinos, and Filipinos comprising the largest ethnic groups.
